Valor

Discretion. Judgment. Discipline. Courage.

The words are accurate but inadequate description of those qualities of mind and heart evidenced by the police officers who captured William M. Gilday on Monday at Worcester. They add up to valor, a word whose original meaning was "worth."

But no words can state what Gilday's arrest and the manner of its execution were worth to law enforcement and to every citizen of the commonwealth and, indeed, the nation.

State Police Sgt. Thomas H. Peterson, Trooper Robert A. Long and Worcester Patrolman Charles W. Moriarty and their colleagues have run up a debt of public gratitude impossible to repay.

Their conduct on duty should effectively discredit the vicious lie that police officers are boobs and sadists. They are not. They are ordinary men, called upon to do an extraordinary job in a time of attack on traditional values. In the arrest of Gilday, they performed superbly.

It could have been a bloody tragedy there in Billings sq. rotary. The fugitive, facing a first-degree murder charge in connection with the killing of Boston Patrolman Walter A. Schroeder, might well have thought he had nothing to lose by resisting. There were two guns in the car. The hysteria summed up in the radical cry, "Off the Pigs!" is abroad in the land. Every officer in the square knew these things. A man got out of the car with a gun in his hand.

And yet, there was no bloodbath, no additional statistic to add to the horrifying roll of violence. There was, instead, pride, integrity and guts, the acronym the police have chosen to refute the radical "pig" epithet.

Men and women of good will cannot but be sickened at the reports of cries from the crowd at Boston Police Headquarters, both the cries of "Kill him!" and those of "Free Gilday!" For those infatuated with the potion of anarchy, the scene on Berkeley st. should prove instructive.

For the men in blue were there with rifles quite as much to protect the suspect from an outraged mob as they were to prevent his delivery by radical sympathizers.

Prof. James Q. Wilson of Harvard, in "Varieties of Police Behavior," reiterates what thoughtful observers of police work and policemen themselves have long known: That in this increasingly difficult and hazardous service, the enlisted men, the sergeants and patrolmen, must make the critical, life-and-death decisions.

On Monday, they made all the right ones. The best way the public can show its gratitude is through understanding and support.
